

Interpretive signs

Interpretive signs are intended to convey information about natural resources, cultural resources, historic events, and other related activities.

- Locate interpretive signs where there is a desire to convey information to visitors about natural resources, cultural resources, historic events, and other activities. Write interpretive signs in Salish, Kootenai, and English. Incorporated interpretive signs with pull-off and turnout areas along the road since most require a visitor to stop and read the text/graphics on the sign. Locations for interpretive signs are: Flathead Reservation entrance near Evaro, Ravalli Hill site, and Polson Hill site.
- Explore utilizing CSKT radio as a means to convey information about natural resources, cultural resources, historic events, and other related activities.
- Incorporate a logo illustrating the Coyote theme into interpretive signage as appropriate.
- Information to be included on signs located at the Ravalli Hill will be developed in consultation with the Tribal Preservation Officer.
- Information to be included on signs located at the Polson Hill Interpretive Overlook will be developed in consultation with the CSKT Natural Resource Department.

Interpretive signs can convey information about a specific area, such as Ninepipe, to travelers.

Visitor Centers & Interpretive Overlooks

The primary objective of visitor centers and interpretive overlooks is to provide opportunities for travelers to find out more about the Flathead Indian Reservation, the Salish, Kootenai, and Pend d'Oriennes people, and/or unique natural or cultural sites. The visitor centers and interpretive overlooks also provide an opportunity for travelers to rest and relax before continuing on their way.
